he took a train for Meppen at ten o clock. He was on the firing ground in Meppen at daybreak with a score of naval and military experts. He examined minutely every gun that was tested especially the new small guns tor the navy, the big coast breechloaders and the revolving guns. He was princularly delighted with the new twin gun, consisting of two barrels on one carriage. He fired this gun binself, and suggun, consisting of two barriers on one carriage. He fired this gun bimself, and suggested the making of a similar pattern for the ironelads. Erupp's new mickel-plated compound armor plates stood the soverest tests, and the Emperor remarked that they had now been proved to be the finest armor plates yet put together. That night the Emperor went to bed at 11 o'clock, and he rose at 1 o'clock on Wednesday morning to start for Wilhelmshaven to see the Duke of Oldenburg.

On his way he stopped to board the frights Boewilf at 10 o clock in the morning. This war-ship is the first one of its kind that the Emperor had seen, and he went all over her from stem to stern and from top to bottom. He examined the keel, funnels, arrangements for armament and the officers' nuarters. He then rested a little in his staternom, while the yacht he boarded cruised out towards Heligoland. After a voyage around the island he returned to the mouth of the Weser on Saturday morning. He inspected Weser on Saturday morning. He inspected minutely the dock-yards of the North German Lloyd, talked with the superintendent as to the disposition of the Ender, and then has-tened off to Potsdam. Sunday school meeting, intending to take a seat modestly at the back part of the house and hear what went on. Entering the hall the two ladies were beckoned by an usher.
"This way, ladies!"
They followed him, and before they were fully aware of it were upon the platform close by the minister's side and facing the audience. The minister then proceeded to make an address, in which he eulogized the fame of the literary man and the virtues of his wife, end-ing by inviting her to address the children. But the Eastern lady, who was shy and retiring in disposition, could not even attempt to rise; perhaps her knees would not have held her if she had attempted. She sat still, quite overwhelmed, with downcast eyes.

the minister broke.
"If, then," he said, "our friends do not care to address us, perhaps they will rise and give us a good look at them."

This was as hard a demand to fill as the other. The ladies sat perfectly quiet and there was another still more painful silence. There was nothing to do but to go on with the avergises. It was an awful experience for the lady from the East; but in spite of it she spent her time in the town very delightfully, finding the people warm hearted beyond all account and the place attractive and interest-

A Distinguished Lawyer Dead.

Winston, N. C., May 4.—[Special.]—Hon-W. B. Glenn, of this city, who has been an inmate of the State Hospital at Morganton for a year and a half, died in that institution this morning. He had been declining rapidly this morning. He had been declining rapidly for some time and his death was not unexpected. Mr. Glenn was born in Yadkin county, April 19, 1847; his father being the late Tyree Glenn, of that county. After a good school education he graduated at Princeton College in 1870, and commenced to read law under Judge R. M. Pearson at Richmond Hill. He got his license in 1872 and first settled at Yadkin and then moved to Forsyth where he associated himself in the practice of law with Hon. C. B. Watson, and afterwards with Major R. B. Glenn, While in Yadkin he was a member of the State House of Kepresentstives, and in 1881 represented Forsyth and EMPEROR WILLIAM'S DUTIES.

night, April 29, 1832, and forwarded to the Chamber of Commerce of this city:
Whereas, the federal statute of August 9, 1789, is the permissive act of Congress in virtue of which the Pilot Association of Virginia, under the laws of Virginia, is empowered to compel vessels coming into certain waters of the State to employ Virginia pilots, and said permissive act has been so revised as to exempt coastwise vessels propelled in and said permissive act has been so revised as to exempt coastwise vessels propelled in whole or part by steam from the obligation to employ State pilots. And the Virginia pilot laws have been so amended as to exempt coastwise sailing vessels upon the Potomac river from the obligation to employ Virginia pilots and so as to permit the Filot Association of Virginia to compound for pilotage fees with coastwise sailing vessels in the other waters of the State, in consideration of the payment of a license tax solely for the use of the Virginia Filot Association; and Whereas, the conditions of more than a century ago are so changed by the aids to and improvements in navigation of the present century ago are so changed by the aids to and improvements in navigation of the present day that the services of the State pilots are no longer necessary for the sale conduct of coatwise vessels in these waters, which sailing vessels with their own pilots and crews, and towed by tugs with competent pilots, are at no greater risk than the coastwise steamers carrying more precious cargoes, and said sailing vessels in many instances come into competition with the coastwise steamers, and can therefore ill afford to bear the burden of this discriminating tax; and Whereas, it is the manifest interest of the State and of the producers and consumers in the State, that freights should be cheapened as much as possible by removing all unnecessary burdens and restrictions from coastwise sailing vessels, trading in or seeking to trade in its waters, and it is confidently believed that this is equally true of other States hav-ing similar pilot laws, and that the efficiency and connomy of the service to vessels engaged in foreign trade, is in no degree dependent upon the tees derived from piloting or licensing coasting vessels, and that even if the receipts from piloting vessels in foreign trade are not sufficient to adequately sustain the pilot service of Virginia, that it is unwise, unjust and unconstitutional to impose the burden of compulsory pilotage or a pose the burden of compulsory pilotage or a license tax arbitrarily upon the coasting vessels of the country not requiring or using the 1.
